Dick Gregory

Back from Iran

Gregory at U.P.S.

Dick Gregory, professional comedian turned author, lecturer and human rights activist is coming to the University of Puget Sound, Thursday, September 25, at 8 p.m. in Kilworth Chapel.

The speaker was born in the black ghetto of St. Louis, Mo. A high school track and field champion, he participated in track at Illinois University. Later when he entered the entertainment field, he quickly rose to national prominence.

During the civil rights movement of 1960's, Gregory marched in every major demonstration for human rights in this country. He devoted his efforts to giving benefit performances for civil rights and peace groups. This participation cost him over a million dollars in cancelled bookings, travel expenses and legal fees.

Jailed repeatedly, the activist was arrested protesting de facto segregation in the Chicago school system and in Washington state demonstrating with the Nisqually Indians.

Most recently, Gregory returned from Tehran, Iran. In that city he fasted for 4½ months and met with Iranian authorities seeking to secure the release of the 52 American hostages.

He currently plans to march from New York to the White House, continuing his fast for peace, to protest to the Carter administration how close the world is to war.

The appearance is sponsored by the Associated Students of UPS Artists and Lecture committee. General admission $2.

Mona H. Bailey

Delta prexy chairs CBC weekend

Mona Bailey, National President of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., has been named Honorary Co-Chairperson, along with Pittsburg Pirates first baseman and team captain; Willie Stargell, for the Tenth Annual Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) Legislative Weekend.

The theme for the CBC's tenth anniversay is: "Congressional Black Caucus Decade of Achievement: A Salute to the Black Family"

Activities begin in Washington, D.C. tomorrow September 25, and continue through Sunday the 28th. The Annual Legislative Weekend is designed to bring together concerned and dedicated people from across the country to discuss major issues facing Black and poor people and to develop the national support network for the sixteen Black Members of Congress while raising funds to support Caucus activities.

The naming of Ms. Bailey as an Honorary Chairperson marks the first time for a Seattle area resident to be the recipient of such an honor.

Ms. Bailey says she was surprised and honored when asked to serve the Caucus in this capacity. She thinks however, that her participation is due more to Delta Sigma Theta's past record of community service, than to her own individual achievements.

"I believe my involvement in this year's Caucus activities is not solely the result of personal accomplishments. More importantly, it represents the nearly sixty-eight years that Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Incorporated has devoted constant effort toward helping the Black family reach a status of existence far above the survival level. This is a goal our organization shares in common with the legislative aims of the Congressional Black Caucus."

Bailey is expected to play an active leadership role in all the events scheduled for the Legislative Weekend, including participation in delivering a special tribute to the Black Family during the "Salute to the Black Family" Awards Program. Her activities will culminate at the Congressional Black Caucus Tenth Annual Awards Dinner which traditionally honors those Americans who have given selflessly to the cause of honor, dignity and justice for all Americans.

Ms. Bailey, who was recently featured as one of Ebony Magazine's 100 Most Influential Black Americans, is currently the Assistant State Superintendent of Public Instruction for the Division of Special and Equal Education Programs for the State of Washington. She resides on Mercer Island with her husband, William Bailey and their two sons, Peter and Christopher.

Political campaigns lecture at PLU

Fifty years of American political campaign commercials and how they have affected the electoral process is the topic of a film and lecture at Pacific Lutheran University Tuesday, September 30.

The lecturer, James Hall, will begin his presentation in the PLU University Center at 7:30 p.m.

Hall is a freelance writer, media critic and production staff member at a major Los Angeles advertising agency. His program, entitled "Promise Them Anything," includes many current and past campaign television commercials and short films, selected for their historical significance as well as their sophisticated production and entertainment value.

According to Hall, the commercials bring into focus the fascinating, uniquely American practice of turning vital social issues and political causes into flashy 30 and 60-second commercial spots.

Hall recently spent a year gathering material from film archives, libraries, ad agencies, campaign headquarters and presidential libraries.

Issues covered include the depression, cold war, the bomb, civil rights and current issues. The campaign spots feature most major presidential candidates since Franklin Roosevelt.

Tickets for the PLU Lecture Series-soibsired origran are available at the door. Adults are $3, students and senior citizens are half-price. Tickets for the series season, which also features Senator Mark Hatfield, population expert; Paul Erlich, and ERA debaters; Phyllis Schafly and Karen DeCrow, are $5. American Families in Transition

The Family and Social Change

By BARBARA LASLETT

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a series of 15 articles exploring "American Families in Transition." In this article, sociologist Barbara Laslett denies that industrialization and urbanization have undermined family strength in the United States. This series, written for COURSES BY NEWSPAPER, a program of University Extension, University of California, San Diego, was funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

THE FAMILY AND SOCIAL CHANGE

Recent changes in the family have a curiously contradictory character.

On the one hand, divorce has become increasingly common, but this trend has been accompanied by high rates of remarriage. Violence within the family appears to be rising while, at the same time, counseling professions that attempt to resolve family problems have grown enormously. More couples seem to reject altogether the idea of marriage and becoming parents, while others invest money and time in parent education and marriage counseling.

Family relationships, it would appear, are becoming stronger and disintegrating at the same time.

But how is this possible?

One way that social scientists use to understand such apparent contradictions about the contemporary family is through historical comparison. Until recently, comparisons about family life in the past and present were often based on what one sociologist called "the classical family of western nostalgia" -- a happy picture of self-sufficient life down on grandma's farm, with lots of respectful children and many kinfolk living together under a benevolent patriarch.

This picture, however, is more myth than reality. Our knowledge about the history of the family has changed markedly in the last fifteen years, particularly through developments in the field of historical demography. Demography, by studying fertility and mortality, is, like the family, concerned with issues of life and death. It provides, therefore, a useful starting point for examining family life in the past and the present.

NUCLEAR FAMILIES

Despite the long-standing belief associated with a nostalgic view of the family in pre-industrial societies that many kinfolk lived together, the nuclear family -- a group composed of parents and their children only -- was the most common type of domestic unit. Given the high mortality characteristic of these societies, the number of people that lived long enough to become grandparents and share a household with their married children

Virginia Taylor's Outside Looking In

Well folks, the Primary Election is over. Dixy is no longer with us. She's the first governor since 1904 who failed to get her parties nomination. Jim McDermott will be the Democratic nominee and John Spellman will represent the GOP. Slade Gorton will oppose Sen. Magnuson for Senate seat, and so on. The point is...you have until October 3rd to register to vote in the General Election.

An open thought to Jim Anton of Anton's restaurant. It's time to review your contract to the Bicentennial Pavilion. I hope you will consider hiring some Blacks to serve some of the dinners that are given during the coming years. On that note, I'd like to say a few words to the City Council members on the same subject. Non profit organizations have a tough time trying to make any money by giving a dinner at the Pavilion. The tickets have to be scaled so high that it's almost impossible to include low income members of your group in functions held at the Pavilion. I don't mind Anton's making a nice return on their investment, but the taxpayers should receive some benefits also. The Pavilion is to expensive for community organizations to use. We all know that any food served, must be prepared by Anton.

However the organizations sell the tickets, do the planning, and make all arrangements for a successful event. After the hard work is done, Anton's gets the profits. The only thing a group receives is a 10 per cent rebate against the rental of the building. All profit from liquor sales goes to Anton's. A non profit organization should be able to rent the building, have dinner from donated food, drink donated liquor, and eat from paper plates without the Bro. Anton getting into the act. If you, the City Council, are concerned, you might want to take a look at the policies governing the Pavilion rental to non profit organizations. Let a fund raiser be that - a way for people to raise money for worthy causes.

This Saturday, Ben Frerichs from the Community Development Department of the City of Tacoma, will discuss Neighborhood Commercial Revitalization. This is an economic development project for the stimulation and development of small businesses in the City of Tacoma. He will hopefully discuss loan packaging, using private and public funds. The meeting will start at 8:00 a.m. Saturday, Colored Women's Clubhouse, 2316 So. Yakima, Tacoma.

County auditor, Dick Greco, publicly apologized to voters in Pierce County about the inconvenience at the polls last Tuesday. He assures everyone that the polls will operate as usual on November 4th. That's a promise I think he'll keep.

My sympathy to the family and friends of Morgan Giles, former Tee and Turf writer for The Tacoma Facts. We mourn his passing.

President Carter should not however, be allowed to take the entire Black American vote for granted. The Black American vote in this country is not some old hag who is helpless to save herself.

All the average Black American can ask for in this agonizing situation is to see the appointment of concerned Black American citizens in presidential cabinet positions.

Ronald Reagan cannot just visit for the summer in the Black American community, because standing in the wings waiting for an answer is John Anderson.

everything you always wanted to know but were afraid to ask about

POPCORN!

Americans consume over 8-⅓ billion quarts of popped corn annually or 38 quarts per man, woman and child. According to The Popcorn Institute, approximately 70% is eaten in the home (home popped and pre-popped) and about 30% outside the home (theatres, stadiums, schools, etc.) The peak period for popcorn sales for home consumption is the fall, perhaps this is why October is in fact Popcorn Month.

"There is no doubt that the original corn -- wild corn and early cultivated corn -- was popcorn, and it is quite probable that the first use which man made of corn was by popping", is the opinion of one of the world's leading botanists and specialists in corn research, Dr. Paul C. Mangelsdorf, Head of the Botanical Museum of Harvard University and Professor of Botany.

By the time the White Man arrived in the New World, popcorn and other corn types had spread to all Indian tribes in both Americas except those in the extreme northern and southern areas of the continents. Although written accounts of archaeological proof of all the tribes having pop-

American Families in Transition

Changing times bring profound changes to the family

and grandchildren was extremely limited. The extended family households that did exist -- those which included kin beyond the nuclear family -- were likely to among the rich -- those with sufficient resources to support additional family members.

While the family was predominantly nuclear in its kinship structure, however, people unrelated to the family group were often members of pre-industrial and early industrial households. Such persons included servants, boarders and lodgers, apprentices, employees, and other people's children who lived with families other than their own for educational purposes or because their parents had died.

In fact, the proportion of children raised in single parent families in, for instance, the 18th century, may not have been very different from that proportion in the contemporary United States, although the reasons have changed; high mortality accounted for this pattern in the past, whereas divorce explains it in the present.

As a consequence of this high mortality, then, fewer parents and grandparents were available in the past than in the present to share in raising their children. Today, in contrast, older relatives are not only more numerous but technology -- telephones, automobiles, airplanes -- also makes them more available. Contact with kin is easier now than in earlier periods.

BIRTH RATES AND DEATH RATES

The high levels of mortality in earlier times did not affect the elderly alone. Quite to the contrary, infant mortality was a major reason for the high death rates reported in historical statistics. Some scholars have suggested that there is a relationship between the high mortality and high fertility that characterized pre- and early industrial societies.

Since little economic support for the elderly existed outside their families, children were a form of old age insurance for their parents. But, given the high rates of infant mortality, many children were desirable since it could not be known how many would survive.

In addition, child labor made an important contribution to the family's economic well-being. Many children were, therefore, a positive value to families in past times and high fertility was more characteristic of them even though birth control was possible and sometimes practiced. A second important demographic difference between contemporary families and families in the past, then, is the smaller number of children that they include.

Another demographic factor -- age-at-first-marriage -- also differentiates today's families from those in the past. The transformation of a small-scale, owner-occupied agricultural economy to a large-scale industrial economy based on wage labor sharply increased the availability of jobs that were independent of family ties. People were able to work, support themselves, and marry at earlier ages than had previously been the case and they did so. The age-at-marriage in both the United States and Europe declined considerably between the end of the 19th and the middle of the 20th centuries.

As a consequence of the younger age-at-first-marriage today, combined with the decline in fertility and mortality that have already been discussed, there has been a marked change in the family life cycle. Marriages occur at earlier ages and the number of children married couples are having is smaller than in the past. Thus, child rearing activities and responsibilities end when parents are younger than they used to be, while declining mortality means that husbands and wives still have many years of married life ahead of them after their children have left home.

Marriage and caring for dependent children are no longer such overlapping features of the family life cycle. Relations between husband and wife, between adult children and their parents, and between grandchildren and grandparents may well be at least as significant in family life today as ever was the case.

URBANIZATION AND MOBILITY

Two additional factors relevant to where people live may also contribute to the importance of family relationships in the contemporary world. Rapid urbanization has been a feature of American growth since the early 19th century, and the 20th has witnessed an increasing concentration of population into large metropolitan centers. Kin, therefore, are more likely to be living in concentrated geographical areas, making fairly frequent contact among them easier to achieve (and harder to avoid) than may have been true in the past.

And although high rates of migration contribute to the movement of people throughout the country, research shows that migrants, in the present as well as in the past, often choose their destination in part because of the presence of relatives in the new area. Thus migration, particularly under modern technological conditions, does not necessarily undermine family contact. Many studies show that visiting with relatives is often chosen over visiting with neighbors, friends, or co-workers.

How, then, can we understand the contradictions about the contemporary family with which we began? This brief historical comparison of family life indicates that there are few demographic reasons to believe that urbanization and industrialization have "weakened the bonds of kinship," as some social scientists had feared. On the contrary, given the bureaucratized, impersonal character of public life, people may increasingly look to their families for more emotional solace and support than was true in earlier times.

But the increasing divorce rate, the greater awareness of child and wife abuse, and even the growth of marriage and family counseling suggest that the intense desire for positive family contact does not necessarily meet with much success. This, perhaps, is the key to understanding the contradictions of modern family life: the family, alone, cannot satisfy the urgent demands confronting it today.

Perhaps, then, it is time to shift the way we think about family problems -- a shift that focuses not only on demography or psychology, but also on the political and economic conditions of contemporary societies that shape the way families can satisfy the demands that are placed upon them.

"Business in the Black"
Reagan is really running...after the Black vote.

By Charles E. Belle

Ronald Reagan is actually running after the Black vote like no other Republican Presidential candidate, since Abe Lincoln. Linking up in broad daylight with Benjamin Hooks and Vernon Jordan is no joking matter. It's making modest progress to gain Black American acceptance.

There is some real substance to the statements by Reagan like his "Black Americans don't lack capability. They lack opportunity. Given adequate opportunities, Black Americans can be as successful as anyone else in this country." These words were spoken before the aghast audience of the Annual Convention of the National Urban League in New York City.

Considering there were no promises in Ronald Reagan's platitude, it was a plausible performance. Presidential candidates have come before previous predominantly Black American audiences howling to the moon, making a "sound and fury, signifying nothing."

No one truly knows if Ronald Reagan will run to the right so far as to sink social security and other social programs.

Progressive social programs certainly have not been one of his strong points in the past. Presidential candidates, often take cover behind Colossians 3:12, "Put on...compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness and patience." Take notice that progress is not one of the words to live up to!

While Reagan is running for the White House, it is wise for Black Americans to peer back at his past. President Ronald Reagan might well appoint more Black Americans in cabinet positions than the current President of the United States. The former California governor appointed four more Black American state department chiefs than his predecessor Democratic governor. Getting the Reagan for President Committee to come up with key Black American membership will make the difference in his campaign results in November.

Can Black Americans consider Ronald Reagan a friend until Reagan can, like every previous Democratic Presidential nominee since FDR see fit to select Black Americans among his advisors? A stranger, according to Webster's New Ideal Dictionary may be a "guest, visitor or intruder." Invariably Mr. Reagan will be considered an intruder by Democratic regulars, an uninvited guest by intellectual snobs who take the Black American vote for granted and

"Coping"
"I love you..."

By Dr. Charles W. Faulkner

How does it feel to have someone say to you: "I love you." Do you find yourself smiling? Do you feel happy, excited, wanted, needed? Can you imagine how good you make another person feel when you make this statement?

Few statements in any language have the immediate affirmative effect as "I love you." However, most married people limit their use of this statement after the initial period of marriage. Others fear that the expression might over-expose their feelings and place them in a position of vulnerability.

Love is many things to many people but it conveys the ideas: "You are important to me," "You make me feel like somebody," "You make me feel secure," "I can be myself around you." When love is shared life is much easier to endure. It makes all other problems mere temporary distractions. It makes stress and depression disappear.

People who have received little love in their lives have a very difficult time giving it. A child who is loved by the parents is likely to feel a great sense of importance and goodness, and will probably find it very easy to give love to others. One who has received a great deal of love understands the goodness that is conveyed by it and tends to want to "pass it on" to others.

It is often easy to tell if another person has received much love in life by the expression on the face or the way the person relates to others. The happy, kind, considerate and loving person knows what it is to be loved. The sullen, unpleasant, inconsiderate person is without love and is searching for it.

Impudent, anti-social behavior is often the misunderstood voice of a person crying out for someone to say: "I love you." Our ability to give and receive love is determined in our childhood. Loving parents serve as living examples to their children of the happiness that is caused by love.

Having love or "being in love" means that you don't ever feel guilty. You don't ever fel ashamed. You don't ever feel the need to apologize because of the understanding and empathy that exists. You feel automatically forgiven. Yet, you do apologize out of a feeling of compassion. You feel a constant need to express your love because, somehow, you feel that the other person simply doesn't understand the depth of it.

What are some characteristics of love? A feeling of emotional security; a lessening of the urgent need to find somebody; each partner says: "I care about you as much as I care about myself"; each says: "I will always respect you"; each says: "You can be yourself when you are with me"; it gives us more confidence in ourselves, makes us like ourselves even more than before; it makes life more meaningful.

How can you display your love? Show a sincere interest in the well-being of the other person; do something positive and unexpected often. Give a

Cleatus Brooks

At the Football Jamboree held Sunday September 14, The Tacoma Downtown Boys' Club,"Hornets" took charge after the first kick-off. In the first stage, they defeated the Fort Lewis Falcons 13-6. In game two, they downed the Bethel Bull Dogs 6-0. Cleatus Brooks and Eric Williams shared M.V.P. honors, reported coach Jimmy Ervin and his assistant Jim Booth. The players, coaches, and the Tacoma Downtown Boys' Club wish to thank the community for their support in cheering the kids on to victory in both games.

Wednesday, I went to the fair. A lot of people were there because it was Public School Day. Mostly the same rides, but it was alot of fun.

I was with my friend Djuana (Dj for short). Saw my old friends from 6th grade; Francina and Kim Edwards, and their little sister Pam. Many folks I know were working there too. People were walking around with stuffed animals and I was able to take home a glass. I saw an old teacher, Mr. Boyd enjoying the fair with his family. Went on a ride with Chucky Webster. The evening was fun and I saw alot of people I hadn't seen in centuries! I noticed Flip Brown and Tshlene Hendick eyeing the games wondering if they should waste their money.

All in all, the fair was fun-and painful to the feet and body.(a lot of walking!)

Teenagers of Tacoma, let me know of any parties or dances before the event and I can place them in my article for all the readers to see.

Love

con't from p. 5

"gift of love; don't argue. Be kind and understanding; never hurt the other person's feelings. Be pleasant if it kills you; give a kiss, say a kind word. Consider the other person's feelings before your own; don't compete but encourage and find a reason to compliment the other person even if it hurts to do so. Praise the other person often; say to the other person, often, "I love you," and show it in your behavior. Never assume that the other person knows it.

Always, always be a lover. Give love always and you will surely receive it -- always.

corn are not available, continuing research and legends passed on in the various tribes from early ancestor tribes, indicate that popcorn was known throughout both continents.

Easiest and probably the first method of popping popcorn was on hot stones over a fire...or tossing it into the fire or hot ashes and letting it pop out. Other very early ways were to place the popcorn kernels on a cleared hot area by the fire, or to heat them in hot sand which would evenly distribute the heat for popping.

Even the best popper in the world will not produce great popcorn if your method of popping is inadequate. These general guidelines should be observed to insure perfect popping:

1. Be sure to follow the manufacturer's directions carefully when operating an electric corn popper. If, however, you misplace the directions to your popper and you know its capacity, you can use this general measurement: Add ½ cup popcorn to 3 tablespoons oil for 3-quart poppers. For 4-quart poppers, increase popcorn measure to 2/3 cup and use 1/4 cup oil.

2. Use cooking oil or specially-designated popcorn oil for popping popcorn. Butter is unsuitable because it will smoke or burn at temperatures necessary for good popping.

3. After adding oil and then popcorn to popper, make sure all the kernels are in contact with the oil. A little shake before you start popping will do the trick.

4. If you wish to pop popcorn on top of the range, rather than in a popper, follow these easy steps: Put ¼ cup oil into a heavy pan or skillet. Pour in enough kernels to cover the bottom of the pan. Cover a shake gently over heat. When you hear the last few pops, remove pan from heat and empty contents into large bowl.

If, after lengthy storage, your popcorn does not pop into fluffy, crisp kernels, it may have lost some of its important moisture. To recondition popcorn, fill a 1-quart jar ¾ full with popcorn and add 1 tablespoon of water. Cover and shake frequently, about every five or ten minutes, until all the water is absorbed. In two to four days it should be ready for perfect popping.

DELEGATES' POP-POURRI

1 can (2 oz.) flat anchovies
¼ cup butter
½ teaspoon garlic powder
½ teaspoon lemon pepper seasoning
3 quarts popped popcorn
½ quart small crisp nibbles (croutons, canned fried onion rings, cereals, etc.)
2 tablespoons grated Romano cheese

Drain anchovy oil into a small saucepan. Chop one half of anchovies% very fine (reserve remainder for use in salads if desired). Add chopped anchovies to saucepan with butter, garlic powder and pepper. Heat over low heat to melt butter. Combine popcorn and crisp nibbles. Pour anchovy/butter mixture slowly over combined crisp snacks, tossing to mix. Sprinkle with cheese and toss again. Makes approximately 3-½ quarts.

%To prepare Delegates' Pop-pourri for a large crowd, use ALL anchovies and oil from one 2-oz. can and double the other ingredients including popcorn and crisp nibbles.

MINUTEMAN'S MIX

3 quarts popped popcorn
¼ cup melted butter
1 package dry salad dressing or dip mix•
Salt as needed

Put popcorn in a large bowl. Pour melted butter over it and toss. Add dry mix and toss well. Add salt if desired, and toss again. Makes 3 quarts.

%Good with Caesar or French salad dressing mix; with Bleu cheese or bacon-onion dip mix; also with beef-flavor broth mix.

SHOOFLY SNACK

2-½ quarts popped popcorn
1 cup nuts (peanuts, walnuts, or pecans)
½ cup butter
1 cup firmly-pacted light brown sugar
¼ cup dark molasses
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
1 tablespoon water

Combine popcorn and nuts. Keep warm in a 250-degree oven. In a 2-quart saucepan, melt butter. Sir in brown sugar, molasses, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and water. Cook over medium heat until boiling, stirring constantly. Boil mixture to hard crack stage (290 degrees on a candy thermometer). Place popcorn/nut mixture in large bowl. Slowly pour molasses glaze over popcorn and nuts, stirring to coat. Spread in a buttered jelly roll pan, 15-½ x 10-½ x 1 inch, and return to a 250-degree oven for 20 minutes, stirring once after about 10 minutes. Cool. Break into pieces. Makes 2-½ quarts.
